way. He was happy and contented at the City Hall, and would be pleased to go back there.

The Commissioners are divided in opinion on a successor to Reilly, some thinking that Capt. Allaire's experience and success in the turbulent Eleventh fits him for the exacting work of the Nineteenth. Others believe that young blood and detective genius are needed and are pressing Capt. McLaughlin, now in Old slip, who was graduated from Inspector Byrnes's college of detective science, and he will probably be the winner.

Capt. Allaire has desired for a long time to be relieved from the exacting duties of the Eleventh. He is drill master of the force, and feels that he should have easier routine work. He will go to the First Precinet to succeed McLaughlin in all probability.

Capt. Meakim has purchased a home in upper New York and desires to have a command near by, and will succeed Capt. Hooker in the Harlein Precinct, while Capt. Westervelt will go to the Mulberry street station to succeed Meakim. Hooker is slated for the Tremont, or Thirty-fourth Precinct, and Cortright is to return to his old, Thirty-second, or West One Hundred and Fifty-second street Precinct.

Capt. Grant is booked for the East Thirty-fifth street Precinct—the Twenty-first, Ryan to be transferred to Madison street, and Brooks to go to West One Hundredth street, to succeed Murphy slated for Morrisania, Capt. Cassidy is regarded as a prudent and sagacious officer, and the slate-makers say that he will come downtown to Delancey street, Slevin assuming control of the Eld-ridge street station, now commanded by Allaire.

The other Captains, it is given out, will remain in their present precincts, it not being regarded as wise to transfer them in view of their excellent work, and thorough knowledge of their commands and the peculiar people who inhabit them. MAJOR HAGGERTY'S PLUCK.

Urging an Operation Which, if Unsuccessful, Would Cause Instant Death.

Major Haggerty is slowly sinking, his physicians say, and it is feared that he will not live through the day. Dr. C. E. Gilbert, his regular physician, called at 10 o'clock last night, and at 10 this morning was still with the patient.

A series of complications have followed the abscess in the throat. There is a large glandular swelling on his neck, his left eye is closed, and his condition is so painful that he is unable to sleep. He has been kept alive only by bypodermic injections.

Two operations which were performed yes-terday relieved the Major temporarily. An

Two operations which were performed yesterday relieved the Major temporarily. An operation of a very precarious nature, which will have the effect either of materially improving his condition or of causing instant death, is under advisement. Up to this morning his physicians have not dared to attempt it, although Major Haggerty has expressed a wish to have it done.

Major Haggerty has been very cheerful since the first day of his illness. As an illustration of his will-power, his friends say that yesterday he sat up in bed and trimmed his inustache. Friends and neighbors are continually calling to learn his condition.
